From the statement: “We have seen little evidence to support such a claim. The Committee’s investigation has instead identified multiple examples of questionable contacts between Trump associates and Russian-linked persons and entities. Of special concern has been the role of Carter Page, who had extensive contacts with Russians and was the subject of a controversial dossier prepared by a former British spy that bears a striking similarity to information compiled in the weeks before the November 2016 election. It is important for the American people to understand that there is no evidence that these individuals or this collection of information had any connection to the Trump campaign.” TRENDING: FBI Agent Who Uncovered Weiner Laptop with Hillary's Emails says FBI Leadership Told Him to Erase All of His Findings Watch Who would be against an investigation into the possibility that a US presidential candidate colluded with a foreign power?Q: Use an image as an input for Opencv I'm trying to convert an image into an input for the OpenCV library, and I'm not sure how to do it. For example, I have a pic.jpg which I want to convert into a matrix like this: [1 0 0 0 0] [0 1 0 0 0] [0 0 1 0 0] [0 0 0 1 0] [0 0 0 0 1] I would like to know if there's a specific function in OpenCV which can do this, or if I need to do a complicated loop? A: As Matlab experts know, the operation you've described is called convolving with the kernel (Sobel operator). To do this in OpenCV, you could simply loop through your image and do the following. #include "opencv2/core/core.hpp" #include "opencv2/imgproc/imgproc.hpp"
